About

Who is this guy?

GD is a cartoonist who's been making sequential web funnies for nearly 20 years. Although the Internet didn't quite blossom into the digital utopia everyone hoped for, it's remained one of the few outlets where comics, as a medium, still have room for growth. Not bound by the length of the page, the expense of color printing, or the limits of good taste, GD is striving to make content that is uniquely for the web.

GD's art is an amalgam of his strongest influences, from street murals to Saturday morning cartoons. Growing up on a diet of comic books, anime, video games, and action movies, GD revels in bright colors, ludicrous ultra-violence, skin-tight uniforms, and cheesy one-liners.

GD lives near the Pacific coast with his muse and life partner. They spend most of their time watching B-movies, drawing naughty pictures, and avoiding the public.

What is all this?

This is a webcomic called Our Home Planet. It's a science fiction comedy set on Earth, taking place not-that-long ago: Cell phones flip open, compact discs are pretty cool, and the Internet is still primarily for nerds.

Rika and Mai, two mostly-normal Earthlings, have their lives turned upside-down after crossing paths with the D'bo Sisters, the third and fourth-most dangerous space pirates in the Tri-Galaxy area. It just so happens that they're being pursued by a parade of bounty hunters, mercenaries, and maybe even a monarchy or two... but what's it all got to do with that weird necklace?

Rather than spoil anything for you, might I recommend starting from Page 1?

Is this a comic for adults?

OHP is written with an adult in mind, though obviously anyone is welcome to enjoy it. If this webcomic were a movie, it'd probably be rated R, so discretion is advised around youngsters or the easily-offended. You may see the occasional exposed backside or bodies in various kinetic states, perhaps even a frank description of intercourse or an overly-detailed bit of blood and gore. All depicted characters are of legal age.

What species are these characters?

Human-ish.

What's GD stand for, anyway?

That's a secret. Allow me a little mystery.

What's OHP made with?

Older content was created with Photoshop and a large-format Wacom Intuos 3. New work is being made in Clip Studio Paint with a Wacom Cintiq. Both the older, pixel-heavy strips and newer, anti-aliased strips are completely hand-drawn. The only difference is that the newer strips are drawn at 300 dpi, then resized. The current font is Comicraft's Comicrazy, though some older pages also use Dave Gibbons Lower International or the venerable Arial. This website was constructed using the webcomic CMS ComicControl.

Do pages look different now?

Your eyes are not deceiving you. I'll often go back over my work and clean up or completely change things to my liking. If I rushed a panel one week, I may redraw it next week. I generally don't note these changes since they don't alter the course of the story, but I have been known to rewrite the occasional joke and slay the frequent grammatical mishap.

Where's the latest comic?

OHP went on indefinite hiatus at the end of 2012. Although the story is currently paused, rest assured that the adventure isn't over yet!

I think I found a mistake. Can I tell you?

Please do. Most parts of this site, comic included, are created while I'm half asleep, so it's entirely possible that the words leaving my fingertips are completely incoherent.

Are fan-art/cameos allowed with these characters?

Of course, I'd be thrilled! All I ask in return is that you, y'know... show me. Because I wanna see and show everyone else. I love fan-art, it'd totally make my day!

Any merch? Can I donate?

No merch yet. T-shirts soon, perhaps. A Patreon page should be available shortly, which will have some perks for anyone generous enough to donate. Stay tuned!

Where's OHP hosted?

OHP is hosted with DreamHost, whose servers are fast and customer service is pretty good. If you decide to sign up, I'd really appreciate it if you could list me as your referral, since it'll bring my server costs down slightly (but every little bit counts!). Thanks!
